

STAGE DOORKEEPER DIES IN THEATER

Lyman H. Lamb, for Forty-three Years a Resident of Capital, Succumbs Suddenly.

Lyman H. Lamb, eighty years old, a resident of Washington for more than forty years, died suddenly of heart disease last night in the Columbia Theater.

Lamb had been doorkeeper at the stage entrance to the Columbia for the past three years and was well known to stage folk.

About half an hour before the rise of the curtain last night, Lamb took a front seat on the first floor and started chatting with a friend in the orchestra.

Suddenly he placed his hand to his heart and collapsed.

Unconscious, the aged man was borne through the little door beneath the stage used by members of the orchestra and was carried to the engine room in the basement.

He expired before an ambulance from Emergency Hospital could reach the theater.

Dr. Benjamin Newhouse pronounced life extinct.

Lamb had been a gatekeeper at the American League Park ever since the organization of the Washington Baseball Club, and was known to thousands of fans in this city.

He was an enthusiastic follower of the Nationals.

A native of Vermont, Lamb came to Washington in 1870 and established the National Pie Bakery, being one of the pioneers in the business in this city.

The firm was first located in East Capitol street, and later in the Southwest.

New business methods and strong competition caused him to retire about fifteen years ago.

He lived at 40 F Street Southwest, and is survived by his wife and six children.
